DESPOTISM.—He that thinks absolute pow er purifies men's blood, and corrects the base ness of human nature, need read but the his ness of humabhature, need reid but the his-lory of this, or any other age, to be convinc-ed of the contrary. He that would have been insolent and injurious in the woods of America, would not probably be much better in a throne, where orbitals learning and ra-ligion shall be found out to justify all that he shall do to his subjects, and the aword pres-only silence all those that dare question its, for what the protection of absolute momenter only silence all those that dare question it; for what the protection of absolute monarchy is what kind of fathers of their countries it as weak some our fathers of their contrivies in the store terming time; it will each of makes princes to be, and to what a degree of fumuluous waves of corrow that hold from happiness and security it carries divid isolety, where this sort of government is grown to perfection, be, that will book into the late or haton of Ceylon may easily see.—Lacke on Government.

Government. REASON.—What is that reason of which we boast so triumpliantly? It bears nothing more than the relation of objects to our watest is reduced to meric personal interest. Hence it is, that we have so many family reasons, reasons of asliciton, reasons of state, reasons of all countries and of all ages. Hence it is, that the reason of a young man, is not that of an old mani. The reason of a woman differs from that of a hermits and the reason of a soldier, from that of a priset.— St. Pierre.
